

I am writing to protest any action by the FCC or by the Newly appointed Director of the FCC to relax internet standards regarding Internet Privacy and the freedom of ISPs to offer information about the browsing history of internet users to broader commercial use for a price.

I specifically object to the notion that control under Title II of the FCC regulations is unnecessary and a limitation on businesses who invest to expand their activities. I think this is a lie. Returning to the much more flexible limitations of Title I would be a disgrace and a direct harm to me, as an internet user.

The Director's announced intent to return to more liberal constraints reflects a bias and a conflict of interest with his previous employment at Verizon and is suspect on so many grounds.

Retain the current standards for the internet.
